Trip Overview

Originally used as a military line of defense to prevent incursions by people north of the wall, Hadrian’s Wall rambles through 96 miles of England. The hills and valleys we will traverse were historically ruled by the Roman Empire. The road still exists for portions of the wall and we will explore the towns and forts that were built and have grown along this defensive structure. This trip will explore the country’s social, economic, and cultural history, while backpacking for seven days.

After meeting and preparing for our trek in Carlisle, we will bus to the beginning of the trail in Segedunum and explore the 73 miles westerly to Newcastle. Over our period of seven days, we will learn about the culture and history of Hadrian’s Wall and discuss the purpose of borders, walls, and the movements of peoples across history. At the end of the wall we will spend a night in Newcastle Upon Tyne and enjoy the city and its history before departing.
